Compliments of the season! Wishing you lots and lots of happiness and uncommon blessings throughout this New Year.

I am so happy to write my very first newsletter for this year and I can only say “Thank you Lord for last year.” I am already thanking Him for all the great things He has in store for us, this year.

This morning, after dropping the children off at school, I went to see my first client of the year. On my way, I made a quick detour, as I wanted to drop off some garbage bags at the landfill site. They had started piling up.

As I offloaded each bag from my car, I felt relief. With each bag dumped, I felt peace enveloping me. By the time I zoomed out of the municipal landfill area, I was completely overwhelmed with joy.

Friday is the day that the garbage truck drivers come to pick up our refuse bags. I look forward to it, because watching them is like a cleansing process for me. It gives me a clean feeling; like all the unnecessary bad things are being thrown out, never to be seen again. I also get a sense of starting over, so that I can do something better. I got that feeling this morning, as I drove out of the site.

I know a couple of people who had that feeling, when 2015 arrived. Taking several of last year's occurrences into account, all I can say is “Welcome to a great year! You have said bye to 2014, it is gone for good. Now, thank God that 2015 is a totally New Year, with great adventures and victories for all of us. The Lord will exceed all our expectations.”

I also know a lot of people who were blessed last year. Yes, the word of the Lord says that we should thank Him in all. Not some, but all circumstances. I was greatly blessed with a handsome nephew and all I can say is “Thank you, God!” The word of the Lord says in Isaiah 66:9 that I will not cause pain without allowing something new to be born. So I revel in the sheer knowledge that God is indeed perfect in all things. He is the I Am the I Am, indeed.

So, I would like you to stop whatever you are doing right now and say “Thank you Lord”. Thank Him for this New Year of abundance, thank Him for new opportunities and thank Him for uncommon protection over you and your loved ones. Let each day of this year be full of your praises to God. As you remain in an attitude of thanksgiving throughout this year, be ready for expansion and enlargement of your coasts.

But please, stay true to Him and rooted in His path of righteousness. When you find yourself in a tempting situation, ask yourself what “Would Jesus do in this situation?” and endeavor to do what pleases God.

Congratulations on making it into 2015! May we celebrate many more years in the land of the living, in good health. May our mouths be full of His testimonies throughout this year!
